Combined Acknowledgements for Chapters 9 & 10:

With appreciation to the Trustees of the Imperial War Museum, London, for allowing access to their collections and to each of their copyright holders. I am deeply indebted to Roderick Suddaby who, as Keeper of Documents, and more recently as Research Associate, has guided my research over the years with his vast knowledge of the museum's holdings in unpublished documents and his wise advice.

I owe an enormous debt of gratitude to Jack Chalker. As one of my first former Far Eastern POW contacts, Jack encouraged my serious investigation of the "undiscovered country" of POW entertainment on the Thailand-Burma Railway. Over the years Jack has supported my research with extensive correspondence about the musical and theatrical productions he witnessed or was involved in, and with access to his compelling drawings and watercolors of POW life.

I am also most grateful to the following:

To these former FEPOWs for permission to use excerpts from their correspondence and/or interviews: the magician, Fergus Anckorn; the artists Robert Brazil, Norman Pritchard and Fred Ransome Smith, who, in addition, have granted permission to reprint their original art work that has made such an important contribution to this study; more specifically to Norman Pritchard for permission to quote from his writings on the value of music and theatre in the POW camps; and to the musician-composer, Len Gibson, for sharing sections of his unpublished memoir and his composition, "Monsoon." Knowing these survivors has enriched my life.

To the following family members of former FEPOWs: Anthony Wilder for permission to reprint William Wilder's souvenir programs and from his brief biography of his father; Richard Brown for correspondence and permission to reprint the artifacts in Band Sergeant Bernard William Brown of the 2nd Battalion, East Surrey Regiment's collection; Alan Martin, as Executor for Eric J. Martin, who passed away on 11th November 2010; and Patrick Toosey for permission to quote from Lieutenant Colonel Philip Toosey's "Official Report."

To the following publishers or copyright holders for permission to excerpt material from their publications: Pen & Sword Publishers for permission to quote from Brian Best's Letters From The Railway (Copyright 2004); Alan Lane, of Arthur Lane Publishers, for permission to quote from Jimmy Walker's Of Rice And Men (Copyright 1997); Penguin Books Australia to reprint excerpts from The War Diaries of Weary Dunlop (Copyright 1990); and Frank Ruhl for permission to quote from Win Kan Burmadagboek 1942-1945 (Copyright 1986).

I am greatly indebted to my Dutch translators, Sheri Tromp and Margie Bellamy, for their dedication and skills that allowed me to include Dutch/Indonesian materials in my book. As children during the war, both women were interned in civilian camps on Java. In addition, Margie Samethini Bellamy graciously answered many urgent requests for translations of small notes in drawings and help in understanding aspects of Dutch and Indonesian culture. She is the daughter of Han Samethini, one of the most beloved musicians on the Thailand-Burma Railway.

While every effort has been made to contact copyright holders, the publishers will be glad to rectify any errors or omissions brought to their attention.
