

ABOUT THE AUTHORS

Christine Chung '09, from Jamaica, graduated with a B.A. in Geography and a concentration in Community and Global Health. She is interested in global health and international development issues, and hopes to pursue a Masters in Public Health after Macalester. An active member of the Caribbean Students Association, she has also volunteered as a Research Associate at the Hennepin County Medical Center. She conducted research on HIV/AIDS in Jamaica with financing from the Bigelow Action Fund, on which her Senior Honors Thesis was based. She is the winner of the 2009 Health and Medical Geography Specialty Group Paper Competition for a version of her Honors Thesis.

Amy Damon is an assistant professor of economics at Macalester College. She earned a Ph.D. in Applied Economics at the University of Minnesota. She is currently investigating the impact of international migration on families living in Central America. In addition, she has recently worked on projects evaluating the effectiveness of education programs in Latin America, food consumption patterns in the United States, and the impact of land degradation and conservation practices on the productivity of Central American farmers. Professor Damon has worked at a number of international organizations, including the World Bank, the International Food Policy Research Institute, and the Inter-American Institute for Cooperation on Agriculture. She has published articles in Agricultural Economics, Agricultural Systems, and a number of other publication outlets.

Colin Hottman '09, from Arden Hills, Minnesota, graduated with a double major in Economics and Mathematics. As a member of the Economics Honor Society Omicron Delta Epsilon, he was elected co-editor of the Macalester Journal of Economics for 2008–2009. He produced an Honors Thesis focusing on whether violent crime causes individuals to join gangs. He will attend the Economics Ph.D. program at Columbia University after graduation.

Ravi Kanbur is T.H. Lee Professor of World Affairs, International Professor of Applied Economics and Management, and Professor of Economics at Cornell University. He received his Ph.D. in Economics from Oxford and has since served on the staff of the World Bank, in positions including Senior Economic Adviser, Chief Economist of the African Region of the World Bank, and Director of the World Bank's World Development Report. He has authored over 150 publications in journals such as American Economic Review, Journal of Political Economy, Review of Economic Studies, Journal of Economic Theory, and Economic Journal. His recent works include Poverty and Inequality (co-editor, 2006) and Linking the Formal and Informal Economy: Concepts and Policies (co-editor, 2006).

William G. Moseley is an associate professor of geography and director of the African Studies program at Macalester College. His research interests include political ecology, tropical agriculture, environment and development policy, livelihood security, and Africa. He is the author of more than forty peer-reviewed journal articles and book chapters. His books include Hanging by a Thread: Cotton, Globalization and Poverty in Africa (2008); The Introductory Reader in Human Geography: Contemporary Debates and Classic Writings (2007); three editions of Taking Sides: Clashing Views on African Issues (2004, 2006, 2008); and African Environment and Development: Rhetoric, Programs, Realities (2004). He is also editor of the African Geographical Review.

James C. Scott is Sterling Professor of Political Science at Yale University—where he received his M.A. and Ph.D.—with a joint appointment in Anthropology. He is also a member of the Council on Southeast Asia Studies and directs the program in Agrarian Studies. He is the author of The Moral Economy of the Peasant: Subsistence and Rebellion in Southeast Asia (1976), Weapons of the Weak: Everyday Forms of Peasant Resistance (1985), Domination and the Arts of Resistance: The Hidden Transcript of Subordinate Groups (1990), and Seeing Like a State: How Certain Schemes to Improve the Human Condition have Failed (1998), as well as numerous journal articles and book chapters. His research interests include political economy, anarchism, ideology, peasant politics, revolution, Southeast Asia, and class relations.

Michael Watts is Chancellor's Professor and Class of 1963 Professor of Geography at the University of California, Berkeley, where he also chairs the Development Studies major. He received his Ph.D. in Geography from the University of Michigan, after doing postgraduate research at the University of Ibadan in Nigeria. His most recent book, entitled Curse of the Black Gold (2008), with photographer Ed Kashi, addresses the impact of oil on the Niger Delta. Of his many publications, he has authored Liberation Ecologies: Environment, Development,

About the Authors

Social Movements (co-editor, 1996, 2004), Violent Environments (co-editor, 2001), Encyclopaedia of Sub-Saharan Africa (2000), and Globalizing Food: Agrarian Questions and Global Restructuring (co-editor, 1997).