

CONTRIBUTORS

Khadar Bashir-Ali is a Ph.D. candidate at the Ohio State University. She has an M.A. in Romance Languages and Literatures and an M.A. in Linguistics and Second Language Education, also from the Ohio State University. She was Fulbright fellow in Italy in 2000–2001. Professionally, she is the English as a Second Language (ESL) coordinator with the Columbus Public Schools. Her recent publication, along with A. Elnour, is “Educating Muslim Girls in American Schools,” in Social Education 67, no. 1 (2003).

Mohamud Hussein Khalif is an economist with the Islamic Development Bank (IDB) based in Jeddah, Saudi Arabia. He holds a Master’s degree in Economics and Environmental Studies from the University of Toronto, and is currently working on another Master’s in Political Science at the same institution. His publications include “The Somali Region in Ethiopia: A Neglected Human Rights Tragedy” (with Martin Doornbos of the ISS in the Hague), Review of African Political Economy (ROAPE), 2002; “Politics of Famine in Ogaden,” ROAPE 2000; and “Ethiopia’s Plans for the Kalub Gas Unfair,” ROAPE 2000. He also sat on the Community Editorial Board of the Toronto Star, a daily newspaper in Canada, and published a half a dozen articles on a wide array of issues regarding Somalis in Canada, Somalia, and the Horn in general.

Peter D. Little is Professor and Chair of Anthropology at the University of Kentucky, where he teaches courses on development, social change, and Africa. He has carried out long-term research in northern Kenya and southern Somalia and has authored and edited several books and articles, including Elusive Granary: Herder, Farmer and State in Northern Kenya and Living Under Contract (with Michael Watts). His most recent work deals with cross-border trade and statelessness in southern Somalia borderlands, and his volume Somalia: Economy Without State is forthcoming.

Abdi Ismail Samatar is Professor of Geography at the University of Minnesota – Twin Cities. He co-edited, with Ahmed I. Samatar, The African State: Reconsiderations (2002). He is a member of the Board of Directors of the African Studies Association. Currently, he is working on an assignment about the Somali Ethiopia region. He also served as the Chairman of the Harmonization Committee of the Somali Reconciliation Conference.

Ahmed I. Samatar is James Wallace Professor and Dean of International Studies and Programming at Macalester College in St. Paul, Minnesota. He is the author/editor of five books and over thirty scholarly articles. Currently, he is working with Abdi Samatar on a volume on leadership and the state and democracy in Somalia. In July 2004, he is launching a major conference on "Somalis in America: The Challenge of Adaptation." Samatar is a founding member and editor-in-chief of Macalester International in addition to Bildhaan.

Hussein Ahmed Warsame is an associate professor of financial accounting and taxation at the Haskayne School of Business, University of Calgary, Canada. Holding an MBA degree and a Ph.D. in Management (Accounting and Taxation), he teaches students in the undergraduate programs in commerce, as well as students in MBA, Executive MBA, and Aviation MBA programs. He also supervises Ph.D. candidates in accounting. He is the winner of the 2002 Chartered Accountant's Education Foundation Teaching Award and the 2002 – 2003 Haskayne School of Business Commerce Undergraduate Society Teaching Excellence Award. He also won the Vernon K. Zimmerman Best Paper Award, presented by the Center for International Education and Research in Accounting in 1999. In addition, he serves as a member of the Editorial Review Board for the Journal of Business Research.

Ahmed Ismail Yusuf had a nomadic upbringing in Somalia and read his first book here in the United States at the age of 25. At Trinity College some years later, English professor Fred Pfeil infused in him a passion for writing and guided him through a maze of uncertainties. Yusuf has completed a children's book and is working on a series of short stories. He is a social worker at the Community-University Health Care Center (CUHCC), which is affiliated with the University of Minnesota and serves disadvantaged populations.