Fergus Anckorn remembers an incident with sound effects imitator Pinky Kerswell.

And I remember one day, myself, and Bill Wilder, another artist, we passed Pinky Kerswell in this camp, we were walking along, and he was doing one of his imitations of a car race, just as he was walking along just for fun. And some Jap guards came along and they looked at him and he goes [imitation car noises] and then he got out of this non car, went around the front, and was doing this [imitation car noises] and it suddenly roared into life again and he rushed back and jumped in and went with the screeching tires, he was doing all these noises, and the Jap just looked like this, and Bill Wilder nearly fell over, he couldn't stand from laughing, and I must say, we laughed our heads off, the Japs laughed as well, I think they thought he was quite mad as well, because he used to- whenever he was working he would make these noises.
