

CONTRIBUTORS

Gabriela Galvao Andersson is a graduate student at Malmo University, project manager, and life coach.

Brendon J. Cannon is an Assistant Professor of International Security at the Institute of International & Civil Security, Khalifa University of Science & Technology (Abu Dhabi, UAE). His academic background includes a Ph.D. in Political Science (University of Utah, USA) with an emphasis on Comparative Politics & International Relations and an M.A. in Middle East Studies & History (University of Utah, USA). He was previously the director of the Gollis University Research Institute in Hargeisa, Somaliland and Assistant Professor of International Relations at Kisii University in Nairobi, Kenya. His research interests include the foreign policies of rising powers, the international relations and political economy of eastern Africa, the securitization of post-Ottoman identity politics, and the Indo-Pacific Strategy of Japan, India and other states.

Benny Carlson is professor emeritus of economic history at the Lund University School of Economics and Management.

Jamal Ali Hussein is a graduate of Harvard University. A banker and a Certified Public Accountant, he spent nearly two decades at Citigroup/Citibank as an international executive. His posting included 12 different countries around the world, with last being that of managing director of Citibank, Tanzania. He has become involved at the highest levels of Somaliland state politics, including a near run for presidential office. In addition to the above, Hussein has written lyrics for songs enjoyed by many Somali language speakers.

Lyubov Ivanova is a historian at the Institute of World History, Center for African Studies, The Russian Academy of Sciences, Moscow.

Ahmed M. Musa is a doctoral Student at the Department of Land Resource and Management and Agricultural Technology, University of Nairobi, Kenya.

Raphael Schwere is pursuing a doctoral degree at the Department of Social Anthropology and Cultural Studies, Ethnographic Museum, University of Zurich, Switzerland.