ABOUT THE AUTHORS

Anthony Agadzi-Naqvi, class of '98, is a medical student at the University of Minnesota Medical School in Minneapolis. Of dual Ghanaian and Russian heritage, his collaborative work on Secretory Leukocyte Protease Inhibitor and its role in the transmission of HIV from infected mother to child earned him a B.A. magna cum laude degree, and recently, joint-publication in the February 2001 issue of The Journal of Infectious Diseases. Fluent in Russian, English, Spanish, and French, he has an active interest in international health. His research has been presented at conferences in Canada, Honduras, and in the United States, and he will be working at a community clinic in Costa Rica in early 2002.

Ronald Bayer is a Professor in the School of Public Health at Columbia University. He received his doctorate from the University of Chicago. Several of Dr. Bayer's recent books are AIDS Doctors: Voices from the Epidemic (with G. Oppenheimer, 2000); Blood Feuds: AIDS, Blood, and the Politics of a Medical Disaster (with E. Feldman, 1999); and Confronting Drug Policy (with G. Oppenheimer, 1993). His book Private Acts, Social Consequences: AIDS and the Politics of Public Health won a New York Times Notable Book Award in 1989; the Choice (American Library Association) Outstanding Books 1989 Award; and was also a 1990 Britannica Book of the Year. He won the National Institute for Mental Health Senior Scientist Award (1995 – 2000). Dr. Bayer has been an adviser to the World Health Organization, the New York Blood Bank, and the National Research Council.

Terry Boychuk took his graduate studies at Princeton University and lectured in the Center for Health Policy Research and Education at Duke University before joining the Macalester faculty in 1996. He has taught a broad spectrum of courses on health care issues ranging from health policy and politics to the historical transformation of health care professions, institutions, and markets to the sociology of health and illness. His most recent publication, The Making and Meaning of Hospital Policy in the United States and Canada, is an imprint of the University of Michigan Press.

Louisa E. Chapman graduated from Macalester College in 1975 with majors in Biology and Philosophy. She earned a Master of Science in Public Health in Parasitology and Laboratory Practice from the School of Public Health of the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill in 1977, and an M.D. from the UNC School of Medicine in 1982. Following internship and residency training in internal medicine at the University of Minnesota Hospitals and Clinics, she completed a fellowship in infectious diseases at Boston University. In 1988, she joined the Epidemic Intelligence Service at the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC), in Atlanta, Georgia, and was commissioned an officer in the U.S. Public Health Service. During her career as a medical epidemiologist, she has worked with a variety of viruses, many of them zoonotic. For much of the past decade, her work has focused on public health concerns associated with xenotransplantation (attempt to use living nonhuman animal tissue in humans for therapeutic purposes).

Devra Lee Davis is Visiting Professor in Environmental Studies at Oberlin College, and Visiting Professor in Public Policy at Carnegie Mellon. She is an epidemiologist and researcher on environmental causes of cancer and chronic disease, and founded the World Resources Institute Program on Environmental Health. With a Ph.D. from the University of Chicago and an M.P.H. at Johns Hopkins, she has authored more than 160 publications, including ten edited volumes. A member of both the American Colleges of Toxicology and Epidemiology, she also founded the International Breast Cancer Prevention Collaborative Research Group, and the Working Group on Fossil Fuels and Public Health. A lead author for the U.N. Panel on Climate Change, she is writing a book, titled Reckonings: the Education of a Numbers Woman, on how environment shapes life, death, and sex.

H.N. Hirsch is Mitau Professor of Political Science at Macalester College. Among other works, he is the author of A Theory of Liberty: The Constitution and Minorities.

Hiroshi Nakajima is Director-General Emeritus of the World Health Organization (WHO), which he headed from 1988–1998, after directing WHO's East Asian region for the previous decade. Dr. Nakajima received his medical and Ph.D. degrees from Tokyo Medical College (now Tokyo Medical University), specializing in pharmacology and neuropsychiatry. He did twelve years of post-doctoral study and research at the University of Paris and France's National Institute of Health and Medical Research before returning to Japan as Research

About the Authors

Director of Nippon Roche. He joined WHO in 1974 and served as Chief of Drug Policies and Management. Since retirement from WHO, he has headed two health and medical research institutes and served as advisor to the Sasakawa Foundation and Japan's National Cancer Centre. Jorge Nef is Professor of International Development, and Rural Extension Studies at the University of Guelph. A graduate of the University of Chile and holding a doctorate from the University of California at Santa Barbara, he has been a Visiting Professor in several foreign universities and institutes. He has done work in administrative reform and has been Vice President of the Chilean College of Public Administrators and President of the Canadian Association of Latin American and Caribbean Studies (CALACS), and the recipient of teaching awards. He has also been Editor of the Canadian Journal of Latin American and Caribbean Studies (CJLACS). His most recent book, Human Security and Mutual Vulnerability, appeared in 1999. He has worked with national and international development agencies in Latin America and the Pacific.

Rosalind Petchesky is Distinguished Professor of Political Science at Hunter College, CUNY. She received her Ph.D. from Columbia University. Dr. Petchesky founded the International Reproductive Rights Research Action Group (1992–1999) and the Reproductive Rights Education Project (1990–1993). Her publications include Negotiating Reproductive Rights: Women's Perspectives across Countries and Culture (with K. Judd, 1998); Abortion and Woman's Choice: The State, Sexuality, and Reproductive Freedom (1984, revised edition 1990), which won the Joan Kelly Memorial Prize of the American Historical Association; and Human Rights, Health and Globalization: Charting the Course of Women's NGOs (forthcoming in winter, 2002). Her research interests encompass a revisioning of reproductive and sexual politics in the context of globalization.

Mary Robison is a senior from Madison, Wisconsin. She is an International Studies major, concentrating on Latin America, with a Spanish minor. She has studied in Nicaragua.

Janet Serie is O. T. Wallace Professor of Biology and Dean of the Natural Sciences at Macalester College. Her scholarly work has focused on the molecular mechanisms of graft rejection, and on the immune response to pathogens at the body surfaces. She is a national leader in science curriculum reform, and has won numerous awards from local and national organizations for teaching excellence and innovation in curricular design. Her abiding interest in women's health is manifest by her course, Women, Health and Reproduction, and by her contributions to the Women and Gender Studies Program at Macalester.

Hillary Stainthorpe graduated with high honors from Oberlin College in 2001 with majors in Biology and Environmental Studies. She recently completed a research fellowship in Environmental Health Studies at the Yokohama City University College of Medicine, in Yokohama, Japan, and currently works as a research fellow with Dr. Devra Davis on a variety of environmental health projects.

Marie Thorsten earned an M.A. and Ph.D. from the University of Hawai'i under a fellowship from the East-West Center Program for Cultural Studies. She is interested in social, cultural, and ethical issues in international affairs, and has written several articles on U.S.-Japan cultural relations. She is currently working on two projects concerning Pearl Harbor: 1) films about Pearl Harbor made jointly by the U.S. and Japan, and 2) reconciliation events for American and Japanese veterans of Pearl Harbor.

Inés Tófaló is an International Studies and Latin American Studies major at Macalester. She was born and raised in Argentina. Her college studies in Minnesota have been combined with a semester abroad in Paris, and summer research in Bolivia. She has been engaged in the professional sector through internships with the United Nations Information Center in Buenos Aires, The Argentinean Mission to the United Nations, Government and Society Foundation, and Doctors of the World. This fall, she will enter the Law School of New York University to study international law.
