ABOUT THE AUTHORS

Tariq Ali was born in Lahore and educated in Pakistan and then at Oxford. His opposition to the military dictatorship in Pakistan during the 1960s led to permanent exile in Britain. Ali is a longstanding editor of New Left Review and Editorial Director at Verso. He has written more than a dozen books on history and politics as well as a number of novels. Three novels of his “Islamic Quintet” have been published: Shadows of the Pomegranate Tree, The Book of Saladin, and The Stone Woman. His book The Clash of Fundamentalisms: Crusades, Jihads, and Modernity (2002) challenges both Western notions of Islam and Islamic fundamentalist notions of the West. Ali’s newest book is Bush in Babylon: The Recolonisation of Iraq (2003). Ali has also been a filmmaker and scriptwriter, recently completing a documentary on Islam in Egypt shown on BBC4. Ali’s creative output extends to scripts for stage and screen. A short play about Iraq was recently performed at Cooper Union in New York, and his latest work, An Illustrious Corpse, was performed at the Soho Theatre in London in September 2003.

Mark Davis is Professor of Biology at Macalester College, teaching courses on Ecology, Field Botany, and Behavioral Ecology. He earned his Ph.D. at Dartmouth College. Recent publications include “The Science and Values of Restoration Ecology” (with L.B. Slobodkin), in Restoration Ecology 12 (2004) and “Biotic Globalization and the Biodiversity Impact of Introduced Species, Bioscience 53 (2003). Professor Davis is also editor of the journal Biological Invasions. Recent interests focus on invasion ecology, landscape ecology in grasslands and savannas, tree-grass interactions, restoration ecology, the impact of savanna restoration on bird communities, and the application of GIS to ecology. The pursuit of various research and teaching projects has taken Professor Davis to the former Soviet Union, Costa Rica, Panama, Jamaica, Bolivia, Guatemala, Mexico, Scotland, and Canada.

Niall Ferguson is Professor of International History at Harvard University. Other positions have included Herzog Professor of Financial History at the Stern Business School of New York University (where he was named “Professor of the Year” in 2003), Senior Fellow at the Hoover Institution, Visiting Professor of History at Oxford University, and Senior Research Fellow at Jesus College, Oxford. He also serves as editor of the Journal of Contemporary History. Educated at Magdalen

College, Oxford, and the University of Hamburg, Ferguson's recent books include Colossus: The Price of America's Empire (2004); Empire: The Rise and Fall of the British World Order and the Lessons for Global Power (2003); The Cash Nexus: Money and Power in the Modern World, 1700-2000 (2001); The Pity of War (1998); and The World's Banker: The History of the House of Rothschild (1998, winner of the Wadsworth Prize). Recent essays include "Think Again: Power," Foreign Policy (2003); "Going Critical: American Power and the Consequences of Fiscal Overstretch," The National Interest (2003); and "The Dynamics of Defeat: Prisoner Taking and Prisoner Killing in the Age of Total War," War in History (2004).

Anna Kläppe '05, a native of Sweden, graduated magna cum laude with a major in International Studies and a minor in Political Science from Macalester College. During her sophomore year, Anna studied Peace and Conflict Studies at Uppsala University. She has also worked as an intern at Conflict Management Group (now Mercy Corps Conflict Management Group) in Cambridge, Massachusetts. Anna's Honors Thesis explored the complex office of the United Nations Secretary-Generalship, particularly three Secretaries-Generals' management of their mandate during times of contention with the United States. Her academic interests involve global governance, international organizations, and international security.

Michael A. Ledeen is a resident scholar and holds the Freedom Chair at the American Enterprise Institute in Washington, D.C. He earned his M.A. and Ph.D. at the University of Wisconsin. An expert in contemporary history and international affairs, Ledeen contributes frequently to the Wall Street Journal, the Weekly Standard, the National Review, and Commentary, and serves as a foreign editor of the American Spectator. During the Reagan administration, he was a consultant to the National Security Adviser, the Office of the Secretary of Defense, and the State Department, and was a special adviser to the Secretary of State. He is the author of twelve books, including Grave New World (1985), which predicted the crisis in the Soviet Union five years before it occurred; Freedom Betrayed: How the United States Led a Global Democratic Revolution, Won the Cold War, and Walked Away (1996); Machiavelli on Modern Leadership (1999); Tocqueville on American Character (2000); and most recently, a newly updated version of The War Against the Terror Masters (2003).

Emily S. Rosenberg is DeWitt Wallace Professor of History at Macalester College. Specializing in the history of U.S. international relations, she is the author of Spreading the American Dream: American Economic and Cultural Expansion, 1890-1945; Financial Missionaries to the World: The Politics and Culture of Dollar Diplomacy; The Day Which Will Live: Pearl Harbor in American Memory; and (with Norman Rosenberg) In Our Times: America since 1945 and Liberty, Equality, Power: A History of the American People. She has served on the governing board of the Organization of American Historians and as president of the Society of Historians for American Foreign Relations.

Jesse Bryan Uggla '05, a native of Minneapolis, Minnesota, earned an International Studies and Political Science double major at Macalester College. He is a member of Pi Sigma Alpha, the National Political Science Honor Society, and Amnesty International. Inspired by his semester abroad in Ecuador, Jesse's Honors Thesis proposed the concept of "Creative Resistance" as an alternative strategy to violence for effecting change at the nexus of civil society and the state. His intellectual interests include social movements, identity politics, and the role of the state in global society. Jesse will work in the Teach for America program in Miami for two years and then attend graduate school to pursue a doctorate in Political Science.
