Notices | Dor Bahadur Bista Prize and Erratum

To the ANHS membership,

I am pleased to announce that the 2013 Dor Bahadur Bista Prize for best graduate paper was awarded to Pauline Limbu for her paper entitled “From Kipat to Autonomy: Land and Territory in Today’s Limbuwan Movement.” Limbu is registered in the PhD program in the Department of Anthropology at Cornell University.

The competition this year received an unprecedented number of papers, the quality of which was remarkably high. Of the nine papers submitted, four were from the United States, three from the United Kingdom, and one each from Canada and Australia. The papers covered an array of disciplines, including Anthropology (2), Geography, Social and Cultural Psychology, Linguistics, Second Language Studies, Public Policy, Cultural and Spatial Ecology, and International Development. The majority of submissions were written by students of Himalayan heritage.

I would like to thank our two outside readers for their help. Please continue to spread the word about this prize competition. It is a wonderful recognition of both Dor Bahadur Bista’s legacy and emerging future scholars of the Himalayan region.

Sincerely,

Jessica Vantine Birkenholtz, PhD

Chair, Dor Bahadur Bista Prize Committee

Erratum

We regret an error that inadvertently crept into the name of one of our contributors in Volume 32, Numbers 1 and 2. The last name of anthropologist Pascale Dollfus was mistakenly rendered with a second ‘s’ in the Table of Contents. The error has been corrected in the online archive. The Editors.
