No. 7 Job Environment and Job Consciousness of Agricultural Graduates

Researchers: Tek B. Shrestha, Uma B. Shrestha, & Umeswar Pradhan

Agricultural graduates are the key implementing officers of national agricultural development programs in Nepal. Their number is small and their work efficiency is low, particularly as a result of poor working conditions at the district level. This study investigated these graduates' job satisfaction, and evaluated job environment and job consciousness factors affecting work performance. Based on local needs, this study recommends measures for attaining greater job satisfaction.

No. 31 Wages and Welfare: The Case of Attached vs. Casual Labor in the Nepal Tarai

Researcher: Bhemendra B. Kathwal

This research investigates the different aspects of labor contract arrangements in the sample villages of the Nepal Tarai. Besides documenting existing contractual practices, the paper examines the relevance of such arrangements in light of theoretical explanations. A comparative study of three categories of labor--casual, attached, and semi-attached--is done to examine the welfare implications of different types of labor contracts.
