The Government Inspector (1826), the great Russian satire, chronicles the chaos as a Tsarist Russian town prepares for the arrival of a government inspector. The self-interested and corrupt officials, especially the mayor, scramble to hide the evidence of their payoffs while trying to learn the identity of the inspector. Rumors wrongly identify a poor drifter clerk as the inspector who unknowingly accepts the royal treatment as it gets him supper and respect, both normally in short supply.

Based off the adaption by Peter Raby, The Government Inspector skewers both abusive government and vain, corrupt bureaucrats, providing for ample comic relief. Director Bob Rosen asserts that the play is timely in light of current international espionage scandals, asking the question “who’s watching whom?” Rosen says the comedy lies in “what happens between people…how they try to extricate themselves from certain situations and just make things worse in the process.” The characters – our mirror, as Gogol declared – reveal themselves by “losing any kind of reasoning and going crazy.”

Bob Rosen is one of the founding Artistic Directors of the internationally acclaimed, Minneapolis-based Theatre de la Jeune Lune (1978-2008). He has directed and performed in over 100 productions in his career. He has been teaching “Physical Approaches” at Macalester for three consecutive years, a course based in his training at the Ecole Jacques Lecoq in Paris, and honed at Jeune Lune for 30 years.
