About the Authors
ABOUT THE AUTHORS

Franklin Hugh Adler is the DeWitt Wallace Professor of Political Science at Macalester College. He has published extensively on social movements and political theory in a broad spectrum of academic journals on both sides of the Atlantic, including The American Political Science Review, Ethics, Telos, Contemporary Sociology, Les temps modernes, Patterns of Prejudice, and Il Ponte. He is author of Italian Industrialists from Liberalism to Fascism, published by Cambridge University Press in 1996.

Stephen Burt is an Assistant Professor of English at Macalester College. He grew up in Washington, D.C., and holds a Ph. D. from Yale University. His essays and poems have appeared in American, Australian, British, and Irish journals, among them Boston Review, Jacket, Modern Philology, Metre, PN Review, the TLS, and the Yale Review. His book of poems, Popular Music, won the Colorado Prize for 1999. His critical study, Randall Jarrell and his Age, is just out from Columbia University Press.

Nazli Choucri is Professor of Political Science at Massachusetts Institute of Technology. Administratively, she serves as head of the Middle East Program at MIT and is the Director of the Global System for Sustainable Development. She is also the Associate Director of the Technology and Development Program and a senior faculty member in the Center for International Studies at MIT. She has conducted projects for the United Nations, National Academy of Science, National Research Council, International Scientific Forum on Energy, World Population Society, and many other organizations. She is the author of nine books and over eighty monographs and articles, and holds a patent on a networked database system for geographically dispersed global sustainability. Her publications include Global System for Sustainable Development: Theory, Approach, Design, and Policy (with Haghesta and Baker, 2002); “The Politicization of Technology Choices,” in Business and the Contemporary World 2, no. 1 (1989); and “Knowledge Networking for Technology ‘Leapfrogging,’” in UNDP Cooperation South, No. 2 (1998).
J. Peter Ferderer is Associate Professor of Economics at Macalester College. He is an economic historian and specializes in the areas of macroeconomics and international finance. He has published extensively in The Journal of Economic History, the Journal of Money, Credit and Banking, the Journal of Macroeconomics, the Journal of Economics and Business, and others. His current research focuses on the interplay between institutional and financial market development in early United States history.

Aphra Kerr is a full time researcher based in STeM, a center for research into society, technology and media at Dublin City University, Ireland. Her post-doctoral research (2000–2003) explores aspects of the production and consumption of digital games. She is also working on a research project centering on “Strategies of Inclusion: Gender and the Information Society,” which involves partners in five different European countries. She received her Ph.D. in Communication Studies from Dublin City University in 1999 for an examination of the innovation process in Irish multimedia content companies. She has previously worked on two European-funded research projects: the first examined the social shaping of multimedia in eight European countries and the second examined the role of science and technology policy in social and economic change in four European countries. She has taught digital media theory and photography at undergraduate and postgraduate levels.

Hande KolçakKöstendil is from Istanbul, Turkey, and graduated in Macalester’s class of 2003. Her majors are International Studies, Political Science, and French. She speaks Turkish, English, French, and some Spanish. Her honors thesis is titled, “Reclaiming Authority: Immigration and State Power in France.” Bound for a Master’s degree at the London School of Economics and Political Science in the fall, she is planning to work in the field of cooperation in the Mediterranean or cultural politics/policy. She loves working with children and volunteers with community service activities.

Joel Mokyr is the Robert H. Strotz Professor of Arts and Sciences and Professor of Economics and History at Northwestern University. He specializes in the economics of technological and population changes. Among his publications are Why Ireland Starved: An Analytical and Quantitative Study of the Irish Economy; The Lever of Riches: Technological Creativity and Economic Progress; The British Industrial Revolution: An Economic Perspective; and The Gifts of Athena: Historical Origins of the Knowledge Economy. His books have won a number of important prizes, including the Joseph Schumpeter memorial prize (1990) and the Rankyi prize for the best book in European economic history. Currently, he serves as editor-in-chief of the Oxford Encyclopedia of Economic History and the Princeton University Press’ Economic History of the Western World. He is a fellow of the American Academy of Arts and Sciences, the President-elect of the Economic History Association, and a foreign member of the Royal Dutch Academy of Sciences.

Andrea Purdekova is a 2003 Macalester graduate from Slovakia with Political Science and International Studies majors. She speaks Slovak, Czech, German, English, and some Spanish. Her honors thesis examined long-distance nationalism in the Oromo and Somali diaspora in the Twin Cities. Her main interests involve minority politics, identity politics, nationalism, and refugee and immigration issues. In the fall, she will enter the Master’s program at the Johns Hopkins School of Advanced International Studies.
David Tallman graduated from Macalester College in 2000 with a degree in International Studies and French. He has just completed his J.D. degree at Georgetown University and has joined, as an associate, the law firm of Thacker, Proffitt and Wood in Washington, D.C.